ralph cohen was highly regarded as the visionary founding editor of new literary history but his own theoretical essays appeared in such a scattering of publications that their conceptual originality underlying coherence and range of application have not been readily apparent this new selection of twenty essays many published here for the first time offers a synthesis of cohen s vital work in these pages cohen introduces change and continuity as essential modes of discourse in the study of literary behavior an approach that can produce reliable narratives of literary artistic and cultural change here cohen conceptualizes and develops a compelling innovative theory of genre that promotes a systematic study of historical change offering rewarding insights for twenty first century scholars this book sets out to answer why genre matters when analysing sagas medieval literature and creation in general how genre governs creation in the medieval icelandic sagas applies theoretical observations on the workings of genre to saga literature analysis including media and film genre theory as well as observations from reader response theory the text primarily focuses on Íslendingasögur a group of prose or prosimetric texts that concern the medieval norse world usually taking place in the period between the end of the ninth and the mid eleventh centuries and focusing on iceland tirosh proposes new interpretations to several sagas but more importantly provides a fresh perspective on the importance and application of genre theory to medieval literary studies literary history the dominant form of literary scholarship throughout the nineteenth century is currently recapturing the imaginations of a new generation of scholars eager to focus on the context of literature after a half century or more of close readings of isolated texts this book represents current thinking on some of the theoretical issues and dilemmas in the conception and writing of literary history expressed by a group of scholars from north america europe and australia they consider afresh a broad range of topics the role of literary history in new societies the problem of finding a starting point for literary history the problem of literary classification problems of ideology of institutional mediation periodization and the attack on literary history
